Cultural heritage belong to our children and grandchildren

Opening address by Ph.D. Peter Yding Brunbech, Nationalt Videnscenter for historie- og kulturarvsformidling, National Center for education and communication historical and cultural heritage, HistorieLab, Jelling

Dessiminate and communicate UNESCO World Heritage to children

The ability to disseminate and communicate our UNESCO World Heritage Stories to children is of key importance to the future success of UNESCO World Heritage places. In a future where children are considered digital natives, the importance of creating real -on location- explorations, which provide joyful and learning rich experiences, cannot be ignored when managing our UNESCO World Heritage places. The key note suggests some guiding principles and look at how we can establish playful, creative learning rich experiences.

Jens Maibom, Senior director at LEGO Foundation, former Vice President and General Manager of LEGO Education. Chairman in the Parish Council for Jelling Church, and member of the Steering Group for the UNESCO World Heritage Jelling
